

Corporate Support for Political Candidates in States With Post-Roe v. Wade Trigger Bans June 2022

Corporate donations to political campaigns from the 167 Fortune 250 companies shows striking support for state politicians who favor abortion bans, especially in the 26 states where abortion could soon be banned or restricted.

In five states where abortion bans are certain—Alabama, Kentucky, Louisiana, North Dakota and Utah—more than 95% of contributions went to anti-abortion candidates.

Companies tend to support the dominant political party but increasingly this means that in half the country they are supporting statehouse politicians who are passing laws that restrict not only reproductive health rights but also the right to participate in our democracy.

One-sided giving to anti-abortion state politicians: Of the more than $26 million spent so far since the 2020 election cycle by Fortune 250 companies in all 26 states with impending restrictions, more than 80% went to state politicians who do not support abortion. (See Table 1.)

Top contributors: About 37% of contributions to abortion opponents in the 26 states came from just 10 companies, with the most coming from AT&T ($1.4 million), Charter Communications ($972,000), conglomerate Berkshire Hathaway ($955,500) and Comcast ($935,000). (See Table 2, p.5.)

Louisiana

In early June, lawmakers in Louisiana approved a new bill that Governor John Bel Edwards is likely to sign. The bill will amend a 2006 “trigger ban” that goes into effect if Roe v. Wade is overturned, as is widely expected. The law will prompt the immediate closure of the last three abortion clinics in Louisiana and ban nearly all abortion after “fertilization and implantation,” adding criminal penalties for doctors and allowing no exceptions for rape or incest.

Company contributions: As noted above, 97% of company campaign funding for Louisiana legislators has gone to abortion opponents, including from five firms where the total was more than $50,000. (See Table 3.)

Oklahoma

On May 25, Oklahoma Governor Kevin Stitt signed a new law, the nation's most restrictive, using the approach originated in Texas that allows private citizens to enforce the law by suing. It prohibits abortion after fertilization, with exceptions for rape, incest, and medical emergencies. While the new law faces a legal challenge, abortion in Oklahoma will be outlawed immediately if Roe is overturned. In early May, Governor Stitt also signed a six-week abortion ban into law.

Company contributions: As noted above, 87% of company-connected campaign funding for Oklahoma legislators has gone to abortion opponents, with the most coming from the PACs of four energy and utility companies plus AT&T. (See Table 5.)

Source Notes

The Sustainable Investments Institute (Si2) prepared this memo. Si2 provides impartial information to investors and the public about controversial social and environmental issues affecting companies, tracking shareholder resolutions at U.S. companies and conducting related research outside the spring proxy season.

For this project, Si2 is curating a comprehensive database of all U.S. company-connected political giving from members of the Fortune 250, the 250 largest comp. (“Company-connected spending” assessed in this project includes both direct contributions from the company itself and that from company affiliated-PAC spending.) Data begins with the 2019/20 election cycle, but some giving started well before 2020; data in this memo is through Dec. 31, 2021. The vast majority of company-connected money supports the dominant party in individual states.

Data on spending from OpenSecrets. Data on laws from The Guttmacher Institute. Abortion rights positions attributed by Si2 from publicly available information.
